Peter F. Drucker Management Lecture Series: Motivation and Team Building

Management Faculty with Prof. Dangi

As a part of the “Peter F. Drucker Management Lecture Series”, the Management Department of DME organized a guest lecture on “Motivation and Team Building”. The guest speaker, Dr. H.K. Dangi, Professor, Department of Commerce, Delhi University, enlightened the students on the said topic using video clips from the popular movie “Chak De India”. Dr. Dangi delivered an interactive and informative session where he enumerated various concepts of management such as strategy formulation, team building, motivation, group behavior and leadership.

Prof. Dangi speaking on Management principles

During the session, he focused on the importance of clarity of goals, learning from past mistakes and effective time management. He emphasized that people should move out of their comfort zones and adopt new changes. He advocated that a team leader should be unbiased, well-informed about his/her team and team interest should supersede individual interest.

He clarified the misconception that conflict is dysfunctional.

Conflicts, if managed well and streamlined, can lead to new ideas and creative solutions to problems. Mutual trust and respect is very important for team and organizational success. He stressed upon adequate empowerment and autonomy as being critical in the execution of a project. The team leader need not necessarily be an active participant in the team all the time but can play the role of a catalyst, allowing team members to develop themselves, face challenges and exploit opportunities. To support this, a clip was shown where the girls hockey team coach, Kabir Khan (Shah Rukh Khan) allows and observes his team rise up to the challenge of external threat as a team, each member of the team expressing solidarity and support to each other as they take on a bunch of boys who teased their team members.

The guest lecture was very innovative, rather being a typical classroom, theoretical lecture and there was enthusiastic participation from students. Prof. Dangi's lecture was an embodiment of learning, knowledge and practical application of management concepts. He used and appreciated cinema as a tool of management studies by applying an analytical approach towards cinema.

Management and The Bhagwad Gita

Management as branch of study, is basically a method which makes it easier to live in this world of stress, expectations, desires, ambitions and frustration, as it includes time management, resource management, manpower management, machine management, money management etc. Everyone is in a race to prove himself or herself. But still we are in a state of deprivation, dissatisfaction and in want of more.

According to The Gita, a man is distressed because he starts his work with an expectation and desire of particular result which actually binds him or her in some limits and he stops thinking beyond that. So, one must do his or her work without contemplating about result. Management also believes that if your performance is good, results will be good too. We should not work on basis of anticipated outcomes; rather we should focus on commitment to work. One should not dissipate his energy on desired results; rather one should concentrate on work itself.

Another lesson from the Bhagwad Gita is that one should avoid ego, greed, lust and desire, which ultimately lead to stress and dissatisfaction. A manager while working should avoid such hindrances and concentrate on work.
