About the Conference

The economy, the environment and the society are the three pillars of sustenance and to maintain a balance between these poses a difficult challenge to an enterprise. Economic development involves a continuous clash of interests between human efforts to improve their material being and the processes of nature. Nature imposes biophysical limits to economic growth which, if violated, lead to serious environmental consequences.

A global assessment by the IPCC (Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change) reveals that owing to developmental activities over past few decades, our world has become 0.85°C warmer as compared to temperatures in late nineteenth century.

There is, however, a silver lining to this crisis. All is not lost yet. There is evidence that suggests that tackling environmental concerns like climate change and pursuing sustainable development are not necessarily mutually exclusive and can be achieved simultaneously. This conference will deliberate, collaborate and ideate as an international intellectual community, strategies to achieve a balance between economy, environment and society. This conference aims at developing and discussing business practices that will help in achieving global economic development and tackling environmental issues. It offers a forum for scholars, academicians, professionals and industry experts to present their creative solutions, research insights, cases and engage in active dialogue on the same.

Objectives of the Conference

Broad objectives of the conference are to:

- Generate public awareness about environmental concerns relating to industrialisation.
- Evaluate the impact of economic growth on environment degradation.
- Critically analyze the role of United Nations with respect to environmental implications of development.
- Examine the role of NGT (National Green Tribunal) in checking development associated environmental degradation.
- Deliberate on recent policy initiatives for sustainable development.
- Study global initiatives for environmental protection.

Sub Themes:

- Environmental Laws in India.
- Role of NGOs in protection of Environment.
- Corporate Social Responsibility and protection of Environment.
- Sustainable Development in India and around the World.
